BROTHERS THINK WILL FRAUDULENT

Legal Steps Taken to Protect Their Interest in Nicholas Estate.

MYSTERY STILL UNSOLVED

St. Louis Woman Claims Property of Farmer Who Was Murdered.

Harrisonburg, Va., January 18.—The four brothers of George M. Nicholas, the wealthy East Rockingham farmer, who was mysteriously murdered in August, 1912, have taken legal steps to prove that the alleged will of the eccentric hermit is a fraud and forgery. The alleged will, which was not made until a year after the death of Nicholas, leaves over $100,000 of the Rockingham estate to Miss Ella McClendon, of St. Louis, Mo., who claims to be a former sweetheart of the old hermit, and who, as she says, cared for him and nursed him back to health and strength after a street car accident in St. Louis several years ago.

Judge Haas, in the Circuit Court here, has issued an injunction temporarily restraining the St. Louis woman's lawyers from removing the alleged will from the jurisdiction of the Rockingham court. The Missouri lawyers will have to show cause on Friday why the paper should not be filed here in court, and why it should not be examined by the four brothers, whose court had declared the rightful heirs of the estate, before the strange will, written on a piece of paper, was received by Common Pleas Judge Harrison from an unknown source.

The Nicholas brothers say they are anxious to hurry matters, as the present will, which was not made until a year after the death of Nicholas, leaves over $100,000 of the Rockingham estate to Miss Ella McClendon, of St. Louis, Mo., who claims to be a former sweetheart of the old hermit, and who, as she says, cared for him and nursed him back to health and strength after a street car accident in St. Louis several years ago.

The Nicholas brothers take hope from the fact that Miss McClendon is under a Federal indictment on the charge of trying to secure money fraudulently from the estate of a man in Nevada. This matter, which has no connection with the Nicholas case, is now up for trial in the Federal Court at Cape Girardeau, Mo., in April.

The Nicholas poison mystery, with the subsequent developments, has become a celebrated case. Nicholas, who was a one-legged Confederate soldier, lived alone with his aged housekeeper, the Shenandoah River. He owned much land, and kept his money in a dozen banks. On August 5 his brother Charles, with a number of farm hands, went to the place to harvest the crops. After breakfast five persons, who drank coffee, were taken desperately ill. Physicians with stomach pumps hurried to the scene. All got well except Nicholas, who died in great agony before night. Chemist Taylor, of Richmond, analyzed the stomach finding arsenic.

Many stories of Nicholas's eccentricities have been told. His cattle and horses died from idleness and old age because he could not get his price for them. His farming machinery and outhouses fell to pieces. He once wrote a big check on a scrap of paper to the margin of a newspaper. Rooms in the big house remained closed for years.

Governor Mann and also the local authorities have offered rewards for the capture of Nicholas's murderer, but the mystery is still unsolved.

SAMARITAN AND BRIGHT'S DISEASE

James Craig is a prosperous merchant of Silverton, Oregon. He has time to think of the health and happiness of those about him. A young lady school teacher, the daughter of a friend, was succumbing to Bright's Disease. Craig wrote to the late S. W. Spaulding, then United States Sub-treasurer of San Francisco, to ask if he knew of any truth in the report that Bright's Disease will be cured in California. Spaulding replied that after he had spent $100,000 with physicians his own daughter had recovered, and that case was supposed to be hopeless and to tell the father to put the patient on Fulton's Remedy.

Craig advised the father and the Remedy was taken to the patient. She recovered and was teaching school at last. Craig was delighted and told others. He has not heard the names of nearly a dozen whom he has helped to new leases of life.

You have Bright's Disease do you not owe it to yourself and family to try Fulton's Remedy Compound before giving up. Druggists supplied by Richmond J. Bodeker Drug Co., Owens & Minor Drug Co., and Powers & Taylor Drug Co.

KING ALBERT PLANS PRONOUNCED CHANGE

Certain Amount of Autonomy Will Be Allowed Belgian Crown Colony.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

KING ALBERT, who, ever since his visit to Africa, prior to his accession to the throne, has displayed a very pronounced interest in everything pertaining to the Congo Valley, and to whom, moreover, the drastic reforms of the terrible abuses that marred the rule of his uncle, the late Leopold II, over the former Congo Free State are mainly due, has announced to the Belgian legislature the intention of a radical change in the government of what has now been converted into a Belgian crown colony. The administration of Belgian Congo by Belgian officials, under the immediate orders of a government colonial department at Brussels, accountable to Parliament and to the King, is an immense improvement over the former despotic way of the Congo State satraps, independent of all control and supervision, save that of Leopold II, in his capacity, not as King of the Belgians, but as sovereign of the Free State.

Still, the present administration of Congo remains far from satisfactory to King Albert. He has found that Brussels is too far distant from his huge Congo colony to admit of the latter being efficiently governed from the Belgian metropolis, that much time and opportunity are wasted in having to refer every question, even mere matters of detail, to the colonial department at Brussels, and that, moreover, the officials of this department are unable, through ignorance of local conditions in Congo, to form any correct judgment as to what should be done or left undone there.

Consequently, King Albert has directed his Cabinet to submit to the national legislature of Belgium a bill providing for the establishment of a certain amount of autonomy in Congo, and, at the same time, to direct the legislative council and officials in all local matters. They are, however, those enjoyed by the crown colonies of Great Britain. A considerable latitude is to be accorded to the Congo legislative council and officials in all local matters. They are, however, those enjoyed by the crown colonies of Great Britain. A considerable latitude is to be accorded to the Congo legislative council and officials in all local matters. They are, however, those enjoyed by the crown colonies of Great Britain.

Albert hopes in this way to simplify the government of the colony, to do away with a considerable amount of red tape, and, at the same time, to rid the huge empire of Belgium in West and Central Africa of the administrative trammels which are at present restricting and interfering with its development and prosperity.

The King spent a number of months in the valley of the Congo, as he appeared, and made a thorough examination of it, at that time, intolerable conditions. It was no mere royal progress, but a very searching investigation, undertaken regardless of discomfort, fatigue and danger of local epidemics. King Albert, therefore, knows to-day more about Congo than any of his ministers of state, and, indeed, than any of the members of either of the houses of the national legislature of Belgium.

Sir Harold Harmsworth's recent elevation to a peerage on the occasion of the New Year, will have the effect of adding to the number of peers who are brothers that occupy seats in the House of Lords. Sir Harold will, however, take his place among the peers of the Liberal party, whereas his brother, Lord Northcliffe, sits on the opposite side of the gilded chamber, among the Unionist lords of Parliament.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, Unionist leader in the House of Lords, and his younger brother, Lord Fitzmaurice, also sit on opposite sides of the wool-sack, and vote his against the other.

Other brothers in the House of Lords are Viscount Iveagh and Lord Ardilaun, owners of the great Guinness breweries of stout at Dublin and in England; and Viscount Hardinge and his younger brother, Lord Hardinge, of Penshurst, now Viceroy of India.

There are three cases, too, of fathers and sons occupying seats at present in the House of Lords. Thus, there are Lord Wimborne and his eldest son, Lord Ashby St. Ledgers, who are both Liberals; the Rev. and Venerable Lord Scarsdale and his eldest son, the Earl Curzon, formerly Viceroy of India, who are both Unionists; and Viscount Elibank, who is a Unionist, and his son, Lord Murray, who is a Liberal. Lord Murray, only a year from New York for England the other day after spending nearly a year in Central and South America, in connection with the big oil and other interests of his partner, Lord Cowdray, in those regions.

Every visitor to London from this side of the Atlantic who has stayed at the Carlton Hotel there in recent years, will remember the leader of its orchestra, Jean Facion. In his boyhood a French village shoemaker, who was a genius in his way, taught him to play the violin, and instilled into him a love of music which has been the dominant passion of his life ever since. He resolved to make sufficient money to enable him to turn to art, without material anxieties. After various hardships, and discouraging experiences, he became conductor of a small orchestra at Biarritz.

There he came under the notice of Edward VII, who took a fancy to the young man, and having now amassed a fortune, he eventually developed a high opinion of his ability. After furthering his career in every way at Biarritz, King Edward caused "John," as he always called him, to come to London, and after his arrival there obtained for him the appointment of conductor of the orchestra of the Carlton Hotel. There he has acquired wealth, fame and a very large circle of influential friends, and, having now attained a sufficient competence, is now returning, in order to devote himself to the further study of his musical art, with a view to becoming a leading virtuoso, and the most famous violinist of his day.

It speaks volumes for the cosmopolitanism acquired by London during the last twenty-five years, that in all the time that John has been living there and conducting his orchestra at the Carlton, he is still unable to speak a word of English. Everybody invariably spoke to him there in French.

Nearly all of the obituaries of the late Cardinal Rampolla describe him as having been forced into retirement after the death of Leo XIII, and as having been kept aloof by Pius X. from any participation in the direction of the affairs of the church. It has also been alleged that he was bitterly opposed to the policies of Cardinal Merry del Val, his successor in the office of Secretary of State, especially with regard to foreign nations.

This is scarcely correct. For Cardinal Rampolla remained to the end of his life a member of the Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, which is nothing more nor less than a council of the secretariat of state, and which is entrusted with the task of considering in conjunction with the Secretary of State, matters affecting the administration of the church, and social problems and policies in various foreign countries.

Cardinal Rampolla has been for the last ten years a particularly active member of this council, and throughout all that time has not been absent from more than three or four meetings at the most of the council; while he belonged to every one of the committees into which the council is divided for dealing with different countries.

Finally, not long before his death, he took occasion to deny the statement that he was opposed to the policy of Pius X. with regard to France, declaring that, in view of the conditions that have arisen in that country during the reign of the present Pope, he would have followed identically the same course as that of Cardinal Merry del Val, had he been in his place.
